Scientific
Farming*CORN THAT BEATS FROST.

This Can Be Grown In the Northwestern Wheat Regions.

After nearly twenty years of work by the Agricultural college of Washington and co-operating farmers two varieties of corn adapted to the rigorous climate of the Pacific northwest are making strong bids for a permanent place in the farming of those states whose climate is characterized by occasional late spring frosts, cool nights, even in midsummer, and fairly early fall frosts, writes J. L. Ashlock in the Country Gentleman. The problem of western and northern corn growers, whose exclusive interest till lately has been in wheat, has been to find or develop a type of corn that will stand the late spring frost and the cool midsummer nights and ripen up ahead of the fall frosts.

The two new varieties of corn are distinct types, known in the work of the Agricultural college as Thayer Yellow Dent and Windus White Dent.
Oddly enough, authentic facts relative to their introduction into the northwest cannot be determined. Nearly twenty years ago C. H. Thayer, now dead, and his neighbor, W. V. Windus, who is still living, were growing

YELLOW DENT CORN.

them in Whitman county, Wash. Windus grew the white and Thayer the yellow. Each man had obtained his seed from a neighbor. The neighbors, now dead, apparently had obtained the seed "somewhere in the east" and had done a good deal of field selecting, which in turn was taken up by the Agricultural college.

As years passed by Thayer and Windus grew their corn with increasing success. In the early nineties the agricultural college was founded in the state of Washington, and when attempts were made a few years later to introduce corn Windus and Thayer, who lived near the new institution, enthusiastically donated seed for trial, each vowing that his was superior to the other.

In succeeding years many varieties of corn were tried out and eliminated by late frosts or the cool nights of midsummer. Several kinds escaped the frosts and coolness of summer, only to be killed in the fall even before they could be shelled. The white and yellow dents, however, promptly gave evidence of their worth. Still, it was several years before the agricultural college felt safe in recommending the corn to the farmers. In 1907 it seemed advisable to offer limited quantities of the seed for trial. By this time one was called Thayer Yellow Dent and the other Windus White Dent.

But men who were successfully engaged in the production of wheat and knew corn only as seen in the great corn states of the middle west and east looked askance. Only by the utmost coaxing could the agricultural college induce thirty farmers to try small patches of it. The results were so good that in the next year, 1908, it was possible to distribute 275 samples of seed among farmers who promised to give it a fair trial. In 1909 700 samples of the corn were distributed.
Each year since then has marked an additional step in overthrowing the wheat farmer's prejudice against corn, till the present year finds corn quite well established in northwestern wheat regions. In January, February and March of the present year the agricultural college distributed more than 5,000 pounds of Windus and Thayer Dent, representing only a fractional part of what will be planted.

On the state farm at Pullman, Whitman county, Wash., the Thayer Yellow Dent grows from five to seven feet high, ears well and produces four to seven tons of silage an acre. Yields running all the way from thirty to sixty bushels have been obtained, which is pretty good for a region far too rigorous for corn as found in its natural habitat. Planted from the 10th to the 15th of May, the yellow corn usually is ready to cut by the middle of September. Under like conditions the Windus White Dent grows about a foot taller than the Thayer Yellow, with correspondingly heavier stalks and foliage. It ears well and by October or a little earlier yields six to eight tons of silage to the acre.
